Research: systems augmenting human perceptions

I create systems that augment human perceptions. I believe augmented perceptions will bring a new paradigm of interactions in both physical and digital worlds, and I explore the interactions between augmented people and the physical / digital world. Although HCI researchers have enabled various interactions, they were designed for innate perceptions. Augmented perceptions eliminate the constraints coming from limited modes and capabilities of innate perceptions.

One such example is RattlEye, which enables people to feel the temperature of objects they see. Real-time thermal feedback is provided based on user gaze. Users feel the warmth of coffee and coolness of coke on a table just by looking at them. The experiences are so intuitive and natural that users feel like their visions are augmented rather than they are interacting with thermal interfaces. RattlEye eliminates the need for touch and limited spatial acuity of innate thermal perception from people's interactions.

As the foundation for augmented perception systems, my work include various display technologies, such as thermal, olfactory, texture fabrication, and swarm robots. Creating and evaluating augmented perceptions also contributes new insights on human perceptual system as well as the world shaping it in an abductive manner.

Education

'22— Ph.D. Candidate (Digital Media) at Georgia Institute of Technology
Advisor: Prof. Noura Howell

2022 MS (Interdisciplinary Info. Studies) at The University of Tokyo
Advisor: Prof. Masahiko Inami

2020 BE (Global Eng.) at Kyoto University
Advisor: Prof. Takahiro Sayama

2019 Exchange (Elec. & Comp. Eng.) at The University of Texas at Austin

Publications
